LOS ANGELES, February 5, 2010 — Following his acclaimed run of Emergency in 2008, Obie and Ovation Award winner Daniel Beaty returns to the Geffen Playhouse with his new show Through the Night, which runs in the Audrey Skirball Kenis Theater from March 16 to April 4. Directed by Charles Randolph-Wright, Through the Night is a new piece on family, community and the power of possibility.

In Through the Night, Beaty combines his signature blend of music, poetry, movement and story with his stunning ability to move instantly and effortlessly between vastly different characters. Playing six African-American men at different stages of their lives as well as the people who love them, Beaty's newest performance piece unites this multitude of characters through an extraordinary event. Through the Night takes on universal themes and makes them personal, highlighting the tragedy, beauty and humor within all of us.

"Through the Night is an evolution for me as a writer and performer," said Daniel Beaty. "After the welcoming response from the Los Angeles theater community during Emergency, I’m thrilled to return to the Geffen and share this new journey in such an intimate space."

Through the Night is a co-production with Crossroads Theatre, Ricardo Khan, Artistic Director, Marshall Jones III, Executive Director. Beaty’s show runs in New Jersey from February 11 to February 21 before coming to the Geffen Playhouse in mid-March.
